SENATOR SUTTLE: Yeah, all right, that...good idea, Wausau changes the codes on the individuals. What happens at that point in time, if the codes are different and then the...all of the...all of the different policies and amounts of money that they are being paid...that they have to pay is drastically changed?

SENATOR LANDIS: Okay, let me tell you, there is two parts to the response. The first part is this, the company that is being written, the employer who is being written cannot find insurance anywhere else. So, it's not like they have the right code that would make them insurable, that they somehow lose if they are here. There is nobody that will do business with them whatever the code is currently.

SENATOR SUTTLE: Okay.

SENATOR LANDIS: Okay, so they don't lose much. In fact, what they get is coverage. Now let's assume they go into the assigned risk pool because they can't get insurance. They get given to Wausau. Wausau has to carry out whatever they do consistent with Wausau's previously agreed upon rating, filing and mechanism with the way they do business, that they've essentially told the state of Nebraska this is how we do our business. These are the way that we, you know, that we create our forms, our rates, our...whatever their...whatever promises they've made in the way they conduct their business, sufficient to meet a nondiscriminatory, legitimate way of doing business. They are going to have to conduct this business consistent with that. And there is...if Wausau was to do to one company what it is not authorized by law to do, there would be remedy, and just because it's the assigned risk pool, they don't get king's X to break those, the rules, or they don't get king's X to break their normal way of doing business in this state that is approved by the department. Could you change a code? Yes. But let's scratch our heads here, understand whatever the preexisting code was,...

SENATOR SUTTLE: It doesn't matter.

SENATOR LANDIS: ...they weren't going to get insurance anyway. They couldn't find anybody who'd sell them insurance with that
